Sunset brought the white-haired custodian of the Court of the Lions to the balcony overhanging my fountain. His blue coat bespoke officialdom but his Andalusian lisp veiled this suggestion of compulsion. His wishes for my evening happiness, nevertheless, were to be interpreted as a request for my going. The Alhambra had to be locked up for the night. I was lying outstretched on the stones of Lindaroxa's Court with my head against a pillar. The last light of the April sun had scaled the walls and was losing itself among the top-most bobbing oranges of Lindaroxa's tree. To dream there must be to have one's dreams come true, some inheritance from Moorish alchemy. Despite the setting, I was dreaming nothing of the Alhambra, not even of Lindaroxa. I was thinking of a friend of irresponsible imagination but of otherwise responsibility. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books....
